

Journal is Growing Qualitatively

I am happy to see the improvement in the quality of the Journal. It is indeed growing qualitatively. However, the glow of the paper seems to be too high. It will be better if the glow of paper is reduced a bit or a matte quality paper is used for better readability in all conditions of light.

One-liner 'CA. Crispers' Are Welcome

I am a regular reader of the journal being sent to my CA. daughter. I never miss the bottom one line crisp mind-bogglers, which are very nice to read and quite useful ones. (Shall I say "CA. crispers" are like a Chinese proverb, "the young ones know all the rules while old ones know the exception" and the latest one being, 'The thought is the Blossom; Language the Bud; Action the Fruit Behind') I also appreciate the industry specific articles published in the journal like the latest on 'SIX SIGMA' by Mr. Aditya Singhal in April 2006 Issue.

'Do You Know' Column Was Enlightening

The vital piece of information that 'Accounting Existed in Vedic India' published under 'Do You Know' column in April 2006 issue of the Journal was morale boosting. It proved that India was a leader in accounting profession too.

Article on Revenue Recognition Was an Eye-opener

The comparative analysis of Revenue Recognition published in April 2006 issue of the journal was very interesting and informative. It was through this article (pp1416) that many of us came to know that Indian A. S. on the subject also speaks almost the same language but is silent on software sales / post sales customer support and multiple deliverable arrangements, which we can expect to be an addition in the next revision of the relevant Accounting Standard.

Column on Indirect Taxes Desired

The journal does not seem to have any specific column on indirect taxes. Considering the growing importance of service tax, particularly in the context of the practising CAs, it would be a good idea to have a regular column on Indirect Taxes in each issue, which should dwell upon the latest developments on Customs, Central Excise and Service Tax laws.

No Hindi Version of Journal Please!

Please refrain from taking a populist decision of printing this journal in Hindi, as sought by a reader from Uttar Pradesh through this column. Exams in Hindi are bad enough.
